

SUMMER 2021

BUS 399: What Makes a Leader? Online and Service Learning

This seminar course explores the nature of leadership by examining contemporary leadership theory and relating it to relevant examples found in works of literature, philosophy, and history. Themes that will be explored, among others, include character, communication, vision, motivation, success, and failure. Lessons will be extracted from select leadership figures in literature and history.

EDU 399 – Why is St. Francis of Assisi a Man for All Seasons?

This course explores the foundations established by St. Francis of Assisi, in the context of his own life and times. In addition, this course examines the pervasive legacy and influence of Francis across cultures, disciplines, and individuals over the following 800 years. Most simply, how and why has Francis of Assisi been revered as a powerful, globally influential model among diverse people over time?

FALL 2021

BIO 399: What is the relationship between Nature and Nurture?

This course analyzes the historical, cultural, ethical and scientific issues related to the debate between the importance of heredity versus environment. Exploring the real-world issues related to human genetics, it also looks at the personal, social, cultural and ethical implications of this debate. Credit does not apply to Biology majors.

BUS 399: What Makes a Leader? Online and Service Learning

This seminar course explores the nature of leadership by examining contemporary leadership theory and relating it to relevant examples found in works of literature, philosophy, and history. Themes that will be explored, among others, include character, communication, vision, motivation, success, and failure. Lessons will be extracted from select leadership figures in literature and history.